Integrating the HT with "real data":

tree.musictrails is a web app that relates artists by common performances on bands, discs, compilations, etc.

This way you can inter-relate artists/bands to other artists/bands the same way you'd do with actors at the "six degrees of separation" game.

See for example a Pearl Jam query. I'll wait for you right here.

See what happened? The page queried all Pearl Jam's related artists (mainly the members of the band) and then connected those artists to other bands they took part.

Testing the design of the book

May 15, 2007 | Comments \(17\)

How would you test the design of a book?

Not the content, but the quality of a book as a functioning information system?

It's a strange question—the book, after all, has been around for centuries, and its design is fairly stable. Conventions exist to guide what goes on the covers, the spine, the pages, and so on. Readers expect tables of contents, an index, chapters, sections, and pagination.

But it doesn't hurt to look for ways of carrying out those conventions more effectively. And maybe there is room for innovation when it comes to book design?

As a fledgling publisher, one focused on user experience design,

Founded in late 2005, Rosenfeld Media is a publishing house dedicated to developing short, practical, and useful books on user experience design. Our books will explain the design and research methods that web professionals need to make informed design decisions.

As a fledgling publisher, one focused on user experience design, Rosenfeld Media is trying to answer these questions. Our first manuscript, Indi Young's book on mental models, is going into production, and we're hoping to publish it late this summer. We've already designed the interiors—both print and PDF versions—for our initial series, based on a fair bit of market research (detailed here, here, and here).

Jeffrey Zeldman

Jeffrey Zeldman is a prominent lecturer and author on web design. He also runs his own web design studio, Happy Cog↗; and has maintained a prominent blog, Jeffrey Zeldman Presents The Daily Report↗, on the topic since 1995. His most recent book is titled Designing With Web Standards (ISBN 0-7357-1201-8). Zeldman co-founded the Web Standards Project (WaSP), a group of professional website designers dedicated to disseminating and encouraging the use of the standards promoted by the World Wide Web Consortium (W3C).

Zeldman is generally held to be one of a vanguard of proficient visual designers (others include Dave Shea and Douglas Bowman) who adopted standards-based, cross-browser solutions to web-design problems. In particular, he helped destroy the myth that accessible websites have to be ugly or apparently "undesigned". His books and websites have helped promote a general improvement in the technical, visual design, usability and accessibility of websites.

Prominence on the Web

In 1998, Zeldman began the e-zine A List Apart, beginning with the article "Fear of Style Sheets". This website contains articles that have been praised by several Web designers around the globe, namely "Suckerfish Dropdowns", "Sliding Doors of CSS" and "Alternative Style: Working with Alternate Style Sheets".

In 2001, A List Apart's editors grew tired of the lack of standards followed by popular Web browsers. It converted to the standard entitled Cascading Style Sheets, developed by Håkon Wium Lie, and challenged its readers to do the likewise. Hundreds did. However, the vast majority of websites remain uninfluenced by the opinions of A List Apart's editors and Mr. Zeldman.

(A footnote to the above: More recently, an increasing number of websites have adopted CSS and its XML counterpart, XHTML. The influential websites continue to gain admirers while web designers are discovering that adherence to CSS/XHTML saves time and reduces effort. Meanwhile web browsers like Mozilla Firefox, Opera and Apple's Safari are becoming ever more adherent to W3C standards, making CSS2 a prescient choice for the long-term. Slashdot launched an updated design based on CSS in September 2005, which was not a milestone event outside that community. Most of those concerned are holding out for more haphazard portals like Yahoo! to make the transition.)

Zeldman maintains his existence on the Web by Happy Cog, his design group, Zeldman.com, his personal website, and A List Apart.

Personal information

He is married to Carrie Bickner of Rogue Librarian fame, Director of Education Outreach for The Research Libraries of The New York Public Library, and author of Web Design on a Shoestring (ISBN 0-7357-1328-6). The couple have a daughter, Ava. Zeldman is a recovering alcoholic,

Where now?
